Project Title: MaatriCare

Abstract

Pregnancy involves regular appointments, daily care, personal records, and communication with healthcare professionals. When information is scattered across separate tools, organizing activities and preparing for visits can be difficult. MaatriCare is a pregnancy support and care-coordination application that brings these activities into one authenticated workspace.

The system supports pregnancy profiles, appointments and visit questions, daily care and wellbeing tracking, a private symptom journal, milestones, educational resources, healthcare summaries, emergency contacts, and configurable reminders. Users choose which records to include in reports and may share selected summaries through revocable, time-limited links. MaatriCare organizes user-entered information; it does not diagnose or recommend treatment and does not replace professional or emergency care.

Tools & Technologies Used

- Frontend (Design): React, TypeScript, Vite
- Backend (API): Java, Spring Boot REST
- Database: MySQL (local), PostgreSQL configuration
- Security / Testing: Spring Security, JWT, H2

The frontend uses React, TypeScript, and Vite; the backend uses Java Spring Boot REST APIs, Spring Security/JWT, validation, and JPA. MySQL is used locally and PostgreSQL is configured for production. Optional Web Push uses Asia/Kolkata time and requires VAPID keys and HTTPS for live delivery.

ENTITY RELATIONSHIP DIAGRAM (ER)

MaatriCare - simplified implemented relational schema

Relationships: one user has one pregnancy profile and may have many appointments, tasks, daily records, symptoms, milestones, report shares, push subscriptions, and reminders. Appointment questions reference appointments; care tasks reference shared task details.
